Researching Your German Roots: Tips for American Genealogists, by Antje Petty

This presentation on April 4th will focus on the special challenges faced by American genealogists who want to research their ancestors from German-speaking Europe. It will address issues such as language, finding names and places of origin, and she will offer suggestions of resources online and off, in America and in Europe.

Antje Petty is the Assistant Director of the Max Kade Institute for German-American Studies at the University of Wisconsin-Madison (MKI). As the Institute's outreach specialist she helps connect the MKI with Wisconsin communities and schools through workshops, lectures, and publications.

In an article from the society & culture section of the March 23, 2009 examiner.com

Kathy Friberg listed a number of links for various German resources. The links that were published in the article all still work. If you want to read the whole article go to:

Recap of “Why go to Salt Lake City to do research?”

What are the benefits? These are the questions Shirley York Anderson, a veteran of 24 research visits to the Family History Library, answered at the March DCAGS meeting. The answers to these questions were: more research productivity; the availability of expert genealogical help and classes; access to hard-to-find records which otherwise do not circulate to local family research centers and are not on the Internet; and the “high” of being with people who share your passion. All this is done while maximizing the economy of your research time.

To make most efficient use of her time, Shirley always stays at the Plaza Hotel, a five minute walk across the street to the library. This handy location also allows her the flexibility to return to her room as needed for rest and a break from the non-stop research. The five minute commute also allows for more precious research time.

The five-floor Family History Library is entered without fees or screenings. Common to all the floors is a reference desk staffed by a mix of genealogy professionals and volunteer staff who provide research help. There are also service counters, which assist in computer help, scanner help, etc., for the 470 plus computers (loaded with Legacy software) and scanners which are available on all floors. Each floor also has classrooms where the visitor can sign up for specific topic research subjects. Of course, the visitors can bring their own computer and the essential flash drives which have minimized the need for making hard copies of records. If you choose to copy records, your purchased copycard replaces the historic rolls of dimes and quarters. Microfilm readers are available for records not yet digitized. All shelves are “open stacks” and self-serve.

Collections at the library are divided geographically. Family histories are on the first floor. Some are digitized and some remain in book form on the shelves. The second floor has films on the U.S. and Canada. The third floor has books on the U.S. and Canada. The first basement has the international collection excluding the U.S., Canada, and the British Isles. The second basement has the British Isles and Australia.

Shirley shared the wisdom gleaned from her 24 visits. Some of her tips were:

- 1) Before you arrive in Salt Lake City, visit the Family History Library website. (<https://familysearch.org/locations/saltlakecity-library>) to learn about the library and its workings. The “learn” button on the library home page leads to information on classes available, library hours, “how to” instructions for ordering vault films, etc., and WIKIs which help navigate the collections available to the researcher.
- 2) Do your catalog work (documenting call numbers for books and films) before you arrive at the library. Shirley uses “Legacy” to copy and paste information into a “to do” list, and she uses the printed-out report for a “marked up” status report. For items kept in the vaults, the visitor can order ahead for reserved availability.
- 3) Always use a “tested” security cable for your personal computer, and use a “fanny pack” in lieu of any purse.
- 4) Use flash drives to minimize paper copies. Back up flash drives to your computer or another flash drive to minimize risk of data loss while travelling.
- 5) Invest in an apron with multiple pockets big enough to carry multiple films, and use a lanyard suspended around your neck to carry your copycard, a small amount of money, and your hotel key card.
- 6) Plan to visit the library during the “off season”—crowds in December are one tenth what they are during peak summer periods, so computer and scanner competition is less intense then.
- 7) Think about joining a tour group for your visit—there is instant camaraderie and a “high” being around like-minded knowledgeable and passionate researchers. Submitted by John Madigan

Deanna Wollin of Cottage Grove, Wisconsin stated that her good friend and former member of the South Central Chapter of the Wisconsin State Genealogical Society, Joan Huebeschmann passed away on December 20, 2012. Her relatives have donated her research to a local public library in or near Evanston, Indiana.

Planning a trip to England?

You might like to visit the Sloop Inn, St. Ives, Cornwall, England. The Sloop is supposed to be the oldest Inn in St. Ives, dating back to the 14th century. The Elizabeth Baragwanath mentioned in the two articles below is a relative of Joyce

Peterson (who is one of our members).

Another relative found the information on the web and shared it with her. She thought that you might like to learn about her interesting ancestor and the place she lived.

"The History of the Sloop Inn and Joyce's relative."

The landlady - Mrs. Elizabeth Baragwanath - and her father George Wasley, before her occupied the house for nearly 50 years. She has its history at her fingers' ends; back to the time of an old smuggler known only as "Old Tubs".

"Old Tubs" and another noted and daring smuggler, whom they always called "Old Worms," and who had the command of the "swag" in Hicks's court, are the best remembered characters in St. Ives, and many a well authenticated tale of savage conflict between King's officers and St. Ives smugglers dates from Hicks's-court, and the Sloop on the fore sands. In and around the Sloop during election time congregated hundreds of fishermen; beer flowed like water. The red coat and cocked hat of an Excise man were like a red rag to an infuriated bull; party fights with fists, sticks, stones, and any other weapons coming to hand would throw Donnybrook into shadow. The most severe party fight ever known in St. Ives was on the 27th of March, 1820, when the effigy of one Tom Tucket was burnt in front the Sloop for the part he took in the return of Evelyn and Graham Messrs to Parliament. The members were charged with bribery, but their election was confirmed by the House of Commons. About 700 men, boys, and women were all fighters together on the fore sands, and great personal injury was inflicted.

In 1899, the Sloop Inn was a low, yellow-washed house crouched beneath a two centuries old slate roof with tiny dormer windows. Inside, was "like the deck of an old 74 line of battle ship - all beams and timbers", while upstairs, "a four poster bed would fill the state-room; the others were smaller." - West Briton & Cornwall Advisor

"Pudding Bag Lane - in one way and out the same"

This lane was next to "The Sloop" at the bottom of Dick's Hill, now know as Fish Street. It was said that there was a cupboard in this first house that children were forbidden to open 'on pain of death'. When the row was pulled down in the 1920's it was rumoured that the demolition gang had found a set of steps that led down to a tunnel that then went under the road and surfaced in one of the many cellars under the inn opposite.

Perhaps this was a bolt hole for the illicit stock of the landlady of "The Sloop"; a place to hide her secret stash away from the prying eyes of the Customs Men. If so the landlady of the Sloop failed to use it when there was a raid on the town by HM Customs in 1898.

Many in the town had been allowed to simply pay their fines for possessing smuggled goods, but two innkeepers of the town were brought before the bench.

Mrs. Elizabeth Baragwanath was summoned in the St Ives Police Court "for a breach of Section 1876 by smuggling tobacco, and further with a breach of Section 6 of the Manufactured Tobacco Act 1863." The solicitor for HM Customs, one Mr. Le Breton, said he understood that she had pleaded guilty to both charges and he was willing to drop the second charge, provided she paid treble the duty and value on the other summons. So Lizzie Baragwanath was fined £7: 14s:3d.

The landlord of "White Hart Inn", William Elijah Benney, was similarly charged and was fined £1: 9s: 3d for having 1.lb 8oz of uncustomed tobacco. My math's was never good but at a rough guess that means the landlady of "The Sloop" had about 7lb: 8oz of tobacco stashed away.

I should add at this point that the "White Hart Inn" was also at the bottom of Dick's Hill and therefore also opposite the entrance to Pudding Bag Lane, so the apocryphal 'secret tunnels' could also have led to these cellars. Perhaps the tunnels had been abandoned long ago, due to this area flooding at very high tides. Perhaps neither landlord had any knowledge of their existence by this late date; leastways, neither innkeeper had made use of them. By Sandra Pritchard

President's Message:

I've written the last two months seeking your opinions and your ideas. My hope is that your lack of response indicates that we're doing a good job and that you're pleased with how things are going. This is great news! And I'm proud; the members that make up your board have spent considerable time thinking of how things can be even better. We are working to make sure that all things clerical are up-to-date. As we do this we are looking for what the next steps might be. We have written a survey to collect your opinions on those ideas. We ask that you take the 10 minutes it will take to complete the survey so that we know where to focus our attention. We will also use this information to guide policy decisions.

In this newsletter you will find a survey that you can complete and return either at the next membership meeting or via mail to our post office box. You can also complete the survey electronically at:

Please join us so that we can again hold this popular event.

Icelandic girl allowed to keep 'masculine' name after winning court case.

A 15-YEAR-OLD Icelandic girl has been granted the right to legally use the name given to her by her mother, despite the opposition of authorities and Iceland's strict law on names.

Reykjavik District Court has ruled that the name "Blaer" can be used. It means "light breeze."

The decision overturns an earlier rejection by Icelandic authorities who declared it was not a proper feminine name. Until now, Blaer Bjarkardottir had been identified simply as "Girl" in communications with officials.

"I'm very happy," she said after the ruling. "I'm glad this is over. Now I expect I'll have to get new identity papers. Finally I'll have the name Blaer in my passport."

Like a handful of other countries, including Germany and Denmark, Iceland has official rules about what a baby can be named. Names are supposed to fit Icelandic grammar and pronunciation rules – choices like Carolina and Christa are not allowed because the letter 'c' is not part of Iceland's alphabet.

Blaer's mother, Bjork Eidsdottir, had fought for the right for the name to be recognized. The court ruling means that other girls will be also allowed to use the name in Iceland.

In an interview earlier this year, Eidsdottir said she did not know the name "Blaer" was not on the list of accepted female names when she gave it to her daughter. The name was rejected because the panel viewed it as a masculine name that was inappropriate for a girl.

Blaer had told the court she was very happy with her name and only had problems with it when she was dealing with state authorities who rejected it.

The court did not grant her any damages and government has not indicated whether it will appeal the decision to the Supreme Court.
